Interview with Dan M. Mrejeru, the Researcher Who Explores the Secrets of The Human Brain

Dan M. Mrejeru is an independent researcher and writer passionate about neuroscience. Originally from Romania but living in the United States, and with a degree in geology, he has written and published several essays. His most famous is "The Making, The Rise, and The Future of The Speaking Man," a comprehensive collection of studies and articles on the evolution of the human brain. Through this book, in its sixth edition now, Dan M. Mrejeru provides insightful clues about the development of neurons in the brain, especially due to ionizing radiation emitted during several geological eras.

This is a particularly interesting discovery, because ionizing radiation is today considered the culprit of many neurodegenerative diseases, like Parkinson's and Alzheimer's, along with the cognitive decline in humans.

The scientific books by Dan M. Mrejeru also include "The Story of Homo Loquens" "Seven Essays on Creation" and the latest "Solovki's Ersatz," which marked his definitive consecration as an insightful scientist.
